DISCERNER OF DIRECTIONS

After being whisked away to the Kingdom of Wisdom, Milo was caught off guard by the vast and strange world into which he'd stumbled. "Ahem," came a voice from behind him. Milo turned around with a questioning look.

"I'm the guard who caught you off, and I'm here with a letter from the king," the guard said, handing Milo a letter. "Heed the king's advice, but be careful – he is quite crafty. King Azaz has hidden 7 directions to follow on the map starting here in Expectations."

Milo got right to work decoding the letter, noticing the first instruction to start heading ...f our east... from Expectations. "Thanks guard! I won't let you down," Milo said as he wandered away from the man. From a distance, the guard shouted one last warning to not get lost in something, but Milo was too focused on the letter to hear. Milo followed the instructions to the letter, finally realizing what the king wanted him to bring.

Dear Milo,
Welcome to Expectations. During your visit, make sure to take a tour of our eastern lands. While you'll receive plenty of high fives out here in Dictionopolis, be sure not to forget to bring an offering for my court. But wow, esteemed guests, you should beware the folly of the Mathemagician; stay off our northern realm. Bar none, we still can't agree over which is greater: a set of words or a set of numbers. But alas, it was actually neither of our nor their opinions which led to the disappearance of the princesses. Plus, even eastern villages are mourning the departure of Rhyme and Reason. I look forward to your arrival.
